

Reproductive Health Care Accessibility Act

*Senators Patty Murray (D-WA) and Tammy Duckworth (D-IL)
Representatives Cori Bush (D, MO-1) and Ayanna Pressley (D, MA-7)*

People with disabilities have long experienced discrimination and barriers when accessing sexual and reproductive health care. They are also less likely to receive contraception counseling and timely prenatal care, experience a higher rate of sterilization, and are at a greater risk for adverse pregnancy outcomes. And they face other barriers to accessing reproductive care, including a lack of accessibility at health care facilities, accessible medical diagnostic equipment, accessible travel, and reproductive health care providers trained to treat and address the unique and diverse needs of people with disabilities.

The Supreme Court's decision overturning Roe v. Wade has ripped away a woman's right to decide for herself whether or not to keep a pregnancy—and now more than ever, disabled people need to be able to get the informed and accessible sexual and reproductive health care they deserve.

The Reproductive Health Care Accessibility Act would lower barriers to sexual and reproductive care and help ensure disabled people get timely access to culturally competent health care. Specifically, the legislation would:

- Provide grant funding to eligible entities to carry out training programs for health care professionals providing reproductive health care for individuals with disabilities;
- Expand the physician and nursing workforce by increasing the representation of people with disabilities in such workforces;
- Provide grant funding to carry out education programs focused on the sexual and reproductive health care needs of people with disabilities;
- Establish a new technical assistance center to provide recommendations and best practices regarding sexual and reproductive health care for people with disabilities; and
- Direct the Department of Health and Human Services to carry out a study to analyze reproductive health care for people with disabilities.
